ABSTRACT:

This paper examines changes in the OPEC-India relations in the period between the foundation of the OPEC in 1960 and the present. In doing so, the talk analyses how the OPEC/its member states and India adapted their respective oil supply policies and their approaches towards each other in different phases of the global oil scenario. The central idea of the analysis is to follow up on internal developments in these countries to show whether and how this influenced their relationships over time.
